Not illustrated. 1877 Excerpt: . . . matter which we infer, from probable reasoning of various kinds, would occupy our measure, in the gaseous state, under certain normal conditions, if only we could thus estimate it. Hence undoubtedly our results are liable to be affected with very serious errors. So that it may be truly said that the theory of chemistry refers rather to an ideal world created by the reason of man out of the actual world than to the actual world itself. There is, however, a wide interval between the ideal creations of the reason and the figments of the imagination. In the long run the former correspond to realities, and the comparison of the results as to the densities of gases which have actually been anticipated by this mode of probable reasoning with those subsequently arrived at by conclusive experiments prove us to be on the right track. If it be asked why we do not, as is usually done, select a molecule as our unit, we reply, not that the molecular hypothesis is untrue (this would be going beyond the mark), but that it is unnecessary. We do not object to it, but we do not use it, for we do not want it for our present purpose. Having thus obtained the unit of matter, the inquiry before us is, by what operations are these units of matter made 1 We begin by endeavouring to answer another question, namely, of what are they made To this but one...
